Forsome reason the papers are almost undisguisedly looked upon as the natural enemies. of the authorities. The idea that anything like justness can be expected from them, or that in the main they may be made a useful and powerful means for furthering public objects, seems never to be conceived. An unwillingness to communicate information even upon matters of an entirely public character or to assist the papers in the interests of the bublic in forming correct views upon measures which are under consideration, less always been the characteristic of the Hongkong Government, and at times this feeling has been displayed in a way which has been very little | chests, Singapore 690 chests, and have on their in accordance with the dignity which is way for this port 2,965 chests. generally expected on the part of those in Government employ. The special bye-law in the Police regula-

the newspapers may be taken as a good ilhistration of the extreme jealousy with which publicity is eyed in this Colony. So for from such a rule being enforced at home, in mest places the police are depocially ordered ground, us, had she backed, the wind would blow to give to the newspapers all information which may be required upon public matters. she got bead way. Thus she was looked in for Of course, there are certain things which nobody of the slightest discretion connected with a police force: would think of communienting to a newspaper-but this contingency is avoided by referring those who apply to officers of some responsibility such as the Sergeants or Inspectors, and is not only a just one respects the public who have a right to dress stones for works going on in other parts look to their officials whether Police or other of the Colony. Why do not the authorities take for reasonable information upon matters of stronger measures with this gentleman i public importance; but is the best means of preventing such facts as, at a given moment, is undestrable in the public interests to mention, from begoming known. The only altogether is that in nine cases out of ten a about so mpidly, and where it is quite imthere is a certain class of matters which ro only police, but other Government officials prevent a repetition of the offence. are prohibited from communicating. public department which the public have a perfect right to know, and to use strong measures to withold information on such points is quite contrary to the spirit of the present day which does not recognise the necessity of husbing up matters connected with Government, so long as the administration is conducted properly. Why there should be such a morbid fear of publicity in Hongkour we do not know, and are certain that no good public end is served by it. In other places Government officials are prohibited in a general way from writing in the newspapers, but the regulation is always very leniently after baving received 600 onsh in advance. He enforced, and in fact is not brought into play. except in some case of very gross indiscretion—such as rarely if over occurs. Upon ordinary . public matters, the Government offices are in almost every place the mainsprings of information, and the willingness fight ensued. which is displayed to let the public know what is going on so far as they are concerned in it, not only works well in the general interests but is especially, advantageous to the officials themselves, as it gives them froquently an opportunity of having matters explained to the public which may be otherwise detrimentally misunderstood: Repeated and sometimes not very dignified complaints have been made by officials in Hongmisunderstood or misrepresented, but for s great deal of the error that is fallen into, they have to thank their own illiberal policy in respect to publicity. In regard to comments in the papers, a very similar spirit is manifested. Any adverse remarks are amiably. set down to prejudice or personal feeling, it is assumed, as a matter of course, that nothing like a spirit of fairness will ever be found in the papers, and that it is quite useless to correct any mistake as to facts they may fall into. All this, of course, tends directly to bring about the very state of things which is assumed to exist, and a constant feeling of want of confidence is engendered between all who are connected with the Press. and all who are connected with the Govern ment—a state of affairs which is certainly different from what is found in other places. In accordance with this feeling, we also find a certain undignified fussiness on the part of the Government officials in regard to the papers which often bas very peculiar and at times rather amusing developments. Petulent objections are made to small errors in reports, and to other shortcomings either rest or imaginary; and a vigilant eye is kept upon every trivial matter connected with the papers, as though they were naughty boys who required special watching, such as was recently shown in the wonderful communication about references to letteries, and thus in one way and another constant petty irritation is kept up about trifles. We are confident that the local authorities in Hongkong would not find that they would lose by showing a little less dread of publicity and newspapers, and in not assuming that they are necessarily opposed to everything that the Government does. The old spirit of looking upon publicity as in itself an ovil still finds vent in the official traditions of this Colony and the public interests, as well as the dignity and power of the Government, alike suffor from the circumstances.

-VALUE OF FOREIGN COINS IN TH UNITED STATES. The Treasury Department at Washington i according to the New York Herald, in receip of numerous protests and appeals from importers of foreign merchandise in the United States against the construction placed by that department on the first section of the Act of March 3rd. 1873, fixing the velue of foreign coins. The department holds that the previsions of that section apply to the Unstom-house valuation of foreign invoices for the assessment of duty, while the importers contend; under legal advice, that there is nothing in the Act to justify any charge of the specific valuations placed by a long series of Acts of Congress apon foreign ourrencies for Custom-bouse purposes. These protests are, of course, most numerously received from importers of French goods, on which the duties are chiefly ad valorem and at high rates. By the change in the valuetion on the French franc, rates of duty on ad valorem goods are increused about 4 per cent. The Treasury department having had the benefit of the ablest and strongest arguments that could be adduced against its construction of the law of 1873, and being fortified by an affirmative opinion from the Attorney-General is not in a mood to depart from its announced construction of the law, contending that in its most favourable aspect for the importers it is doubtful question which, as they are dissatisfied with the solution as applied by the Treseary department, can best be settled by an appear to the courts or to Congress. No definite action has yet been taken upon the appeals, but there is no doubt that the Treasury department will adhere to its prosent action until it is reversed by the courts or by Congress.—Pall Mal

(Saturday Review.) The advantages of the true story are obvious. the fact of an event having really happened is sufficient to justify a certain degree of interest init. In ope of his carlier caners he makes some characteristic comments upon this favourite test. He tells us how much be was interested by reading, in the account of Charles II.'s oscapo after the battle of Worcester, of the King's meeting a labourer who was going about his morning's work. There is nothing in the smallest degree remarkable about the meeting liself, and it struck Mr. Carlyle so foreibly just because it was commonplace. The labourer got up that morning as he probably got up on only doing what countless of millions of his fellow-creatures have been doing before and since I and he immediately reparted to the obscurity from which be came. Mr. Carlyle's imagination was impressed simply by the fact that this little island of solid truth emerged for one instant from behind the yell of mist under which so many other events of incomparably greater intrinsic importance bave been hidden for ever. He is struck as the astronomer may be struck by the minute comet which looks in into the infinite abyases of space from which it impressed by a fragment in a geological museum. Uncounted millions of ages ago, some monstrous reptile was waddling up a bank of millions of his kind by the freak of fortune. when he was certainly not thinking of any such consummation; and the nigh, of him salls un: to the remotest posterity a dim vision of the enumous past. Mr. Carlyle is never tired of pressing this thought upon us. He is always, calling our attention to the little incidents which open a sudden glimpse; backwards into distant ages and then dissolve into obscurity. This indeed is the portion side of history, whether angient or contemporary. The arbitrary way to which little while and strays of facts are preserved whilst the great mass sinks into eternal night points the old moral that our history is but a purrow track neross a hot omless abyse okablicion. There can be, no doubt in both cases. that a trial ranging over such a vast multitude of facts must have been a severe test of our chiminal procedure. The fact that the jury were able, without hesitation, to find a unanimous verdict is the best proof that the system has not broken down; but the question may be argued, could not the same result have been attained more cheaply and expeditiously, and without greating a block in legal business. The above named Pills, for wind in the stemach, from which I suffered executating pain for a length of time, the same result have been attained more cheaply and expeditiously, and without greating a block in legal business. The theory of our criminal procedure those who may thus be afflicted.—I am, Sir, yours truly, to be discovered by a kind of battle, in which the forces for the prosecution and the defence. are mustered and brought-into conflict, subject to mumber of rules intended to secure fair play between the belligerents. The oldest theory of or minal procedure was that the truth was to be discovered, not by a forensic and bloodless contest, but by a real fight between two living combatants, present in their own flesh On LONDON .and blood. The newer theory is not derived by hereditary descent from the older, for there was a period in the history of our law when a prisoner could not call counsel to his defence, nor have his witnesses examined on onth, the theory being that the court and prosecutors could have no metive except to elicit the truth. But this defeet is only in appearance. In troth, the contentious system is the only possible system. Whatever protestations may be made, the persons who inquire into crimes inevitably come very soon to take one side or the other, and as soon as they have made up their minds they are virtually coursel for the proscoution or the defence. The tendency of the human mind, once it takes up a position, is to accoming date -all-things to itself, to ignore facts hostile to it, and to mighify facts favourable to it. The prisoner, of course, will always do his atmost to make himself appear innocept, whether he is or not. As the contentions spirit is therefore certain to develope itself, the wisest course is mit to ignore it, but to recognize it, and regulate It In harmony with the general spirit of our criminal procedure is the rule that neither side cun cross-seamine or contradict its own witnesses: The witnesses are assumed to be marched under bostile banners, and each, it is taken, is fulthful to his flug. To allow a general to treat his own men us on the enemy's side would, it is obvious, introduce endless confusion. The rula is necessary, but it is occasionally productive of grave inconvenience. A witness may know some facts of essential value, but he may be ready to swear to others that are not true, or be may be able to tell other facts that are true, but are inconvenient to the side that would with to call him. The prosecution did not produce Charles Orton, because he had been in the pay of both sides! Dr Kenealy, in the exercise of bis discretion, kept back the two sisters of Orton, Muore, and Baigent, and he would certainly have exercised a wise discretion if he had also kept back Bulpett. The jury, no doubt, inferred that what these witnesses would tell would not be altogether in favour of Dr. Kenealy's client, but that inference is neither so precise nor satisfactory as would have been the actual testimony of the persons themselves. On the other hand, Mr. Hawkine could not call them, because he could not crossexamine them or contradict them if they told untruths. One suggestion that has been made, an extent of $20,000. is that conneal should have power to prossexamine or contradict, if necessary, their own upon the current local rates will be allowed on Chalmers Vocabularly contains about 16,000 witnesses. It would seem a much safer remedy to give the judge the power of requiring the attendance of any wilness who pught to be called, and whom neither side would call. Perhaps it may be suid that parties would take advantage of the rule, in order to get a more favourable impression, when they know that a be returned on Insurances against fire, effected witness is on their side. That difficulty may be safely left with the judge; and if a party neglected to call a favourable witness in order to get the prestige of the judge's doing so, he would in all probability find him. soil woofully disappointed. If the Judges had possessed this power on the present occusion, it is very likely that Dr. Kenealy would have had to throw up the sponge, and the trial might -bave been shortened by six weeks. Extracts. TOKENS BY ALEXANDER LAMONY. I heard a blackbird at the close of day Thrill out its song against the amber west; I said, "Oh, bird, my love is for away! Tell her my thought, and I shall be at rest ! !! The mellow-throated singer left its hough,

And flow away amidst the twilight's fall; And as I thought of young love's burning vow, I wondered if that bird would tell her all. l plucked a red rose from its parent tree; I threw it in the stream that flowed along, And said,-1' Sweet rose, oh, take a smile from me, To where the blackbird speedeth with its song!" I wotched it take its way far down the stream. With perfumed thoughts to her so young and fair ; And wondered oft if e'er its crimson glomn Would mingle with her looks of golden hair,

And then I knew the blackbird, in its song, Had told her all the love my soul had sent; And that the red rose had been borne along, And found her are ils fraguince yet was spent, ?

BLABBING. Among the many modes of termenting practised by the ordinary woman of society, THE QUELIN INSUBANCE COMPANY one of the worst is her habit of blabbing, or repeating to one door friend the things that have been lately said and done by another dear friend. Some women are positively illnatured and blab from malice. Telling tales is to them what torturing flies is to naughty. children. Every London coterio and every country village numbers at least one of these harpies; and a man who cannot reckon one of them among his own near kinswomen may think himself fortunate. The majority of women blab, not from malice, but, as somebody is said to have whistled, for want of thought. The common blab—that is to say, every fifth woman in society—proceeds upon the principle that whatever has not been communicated to her as a "solemn secret" she is at perfect liberty to communicate to another, Not only does she think it perfeetly lawful to communicate to her friend of Tuesday whatever happens to have been said or done by her friend of Monday, but she looks upon this liberty as a kind of natural right; and resouts the notion of putting any restraint upon herself in such a matter. Her friends say of her, "What a capital letter she writes!" and encourage her by their applause and keen appreciation of her funny stories. She has acquired a renutation for being amusing, and she knows how to maintain it. If the sayings and doings of the preceding day fail to afford matter of sufficient amusement or interest. she is not thereby baffled. There is always the imagination to be drawn upon. Most women. would be utterly at a loss for sufficient conversation to fill up the gaps after dinner, at afternoon tea, and on rainy days, if they were forbidden to repeat and discuss the sayings and doings of their friends.
